DOUBLE SILVER WEDDING CELEBRATED SATURDAY

Celebrating the anniversary of "double" wedding held in San Francisco twenty-five years ago, four people and their many friends met at the Paloma Hotel in San Rafael last Saturday evening. One of the couples was Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Poole of this city, the other was Mr. and Mrs. William Von Husen of San Rafael.

The two weddings were both performed in San Francisco on the same day twenty-five years ago, and within half an hour of each other, but the two couples did not become acquainted until about a year later.

A quaint touch was given to the affair last Saturday by the fact that both couples wore costumes of twenty-five years ago. Another feature of the evening was the announcement of the engagement of Miss Anita Von Husen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Von Husen, to Dr. Edward Listen of Palo Alto.

Von Husen is a well-known wholesale merchant of San Francisco and Poole is the popular local drayman and chairman of the board of supervisors of San Mateo county. About one hundred guests were present at the pleasant affair.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES URGE STAFFORD STREET ACTION

The delay of the Southern Pacific Company in securing the necessary frontage for the widening of their right-of-way bordering on Stafford street caused the board of trustees Monday evening to request City Attorney Mansfield to inform the company that if action is not taken before next Monday that the city will begin proceedings to pave this street.

The paving of Stafford street, one of the main entries into Redwood City from the north has been delayed for several years on account of the Southern Pacific, it was stated. It is the desire of the railroad company to secure land on the eastern side of the street which will be given to the city in return for an equal amount on the western side. This will result in the widening of the railroad right-of-way and make room for another track.

HORGAN WILL IS FILED HERE

The last will and testament of Thomas Horgan, who died in San Francisco last Sunday, was filed for probate in the Superior court late last evening by L. T. Ross, who drafted the instrument which was executed and signed by the decedent on May 17.

By the terms of the will Mary Horgan, sister of the decedent, and known in religion as Sister Loretta, and a nun in the Holy Family cloister at San Jose, was bequeathed the sum of $300. Charles Costello, a cousin residing in Pleasanton, $1000, John S. Dundon, a friend, San Francisco, $1,000. One fourth of the remainder of the estate is left to James Horgan, a brother, Alameday county, and the other three fourths is bequeathed to John Horgan, a brother living in Detroit, Michigan; Daniel Horgan, son of the latter, is named as executor. The will also provides that in the event that he does not act, then Lee T. Ross shall take his place as such executor.

Young Horgan arrived in this city yesterday and will act as executor and remain in Redwood City until the estate is settled and distributed.

He is a prominent realtor of Detroit, and president of the board of education of that city.

The estate is valued at $150,000 and consists of the Horgan ranch of one hundred acres of land on the Woodside road near town. It was formerly a portion of the famous McEvoy ranch. It is a valuable parcel of property, well wooded and back up to the big estates at Atherton.

John Horgan has always resided in the east, while the other brother, James Horgan has always lived about the San Francisco bay.

The well-known law firm of Ross and Ross are the attorneys for the estate.

One of science's choice morsels of mystery is believed to have been uncovered last week when a bed of hundreds of live clams was found on the side of Scotia's bluff, twenty miles south of Eureka, and about the same ditsance inland from the Pacific ocean. Workmen operating a steam shovel on the Northwestern Pacific railroad, biting with the shovel into the side of the bluff, approximately 120 feet above sea level and some eighty feet above the Eel river, directly below, traced a path through a bivalvian colony. Those making the discovery said the clams did not resemble the fresh water variety, but were similar to the Tazor clam of salt water.

Riley. The money must be expended for maintenance and reconstruction of highways. Five boys from Lytton, the Salvation Army's Home and Farm for Orphan Children in Sonoma county, accomplished that feat successfully at a Santa Rosa wild flower contest, thus winning the prize for the William Booth school, which they attend on the 700-acre ranch where they live and study flower lore. Those are the youngsters who recently sent wild flowers to Mrs. Coolidge.

A floating trade exhibit, intended to educate the public in Australia in the superiority of Pacific coast products, is scheduled to sail from San Francisco ports in July, according to an announcement by MacDonald & Co., San Francisco importers and exporters, sponsors of the project. The exhibit comprises displays by numerous coast manufacturers.

Having passed the 5300 mark in enlisted strength, California's national guard now is the strongest in its history. It also is exceeded in efficiency only by the New York troops. Reports received by Adjutant-General L. E. Middlestadt show that during April the 92 organizations in California established a record of 78.82 per cent for drill attendance.

Governor C. C. Young has the disposal of more than 100 state political positions to consider and he must take steps to fill a majority of these jobs as soon as the enactments of the recent legislature become effective next month. Nearly 80 appointments are placed directly or indirectly within the gift of the governor by new legislation and many of the posts involved are new ones. Several of these new jobs carry salaries ranging above $4,000. Notable among these are the positions of director of public works and director of finance, which will pay $10,000 each.

The national forests of California cover one-fifth of the total area of the state, and contain resources valued at $300,000,000 not including their value as watersheds on which depend all the actual and potential irrigation and hydroelectric power developments of the state, and the continuity of municipal and domestic water supplies.

Although California has a population of only 4,000,000 people, the annual consumption is 3,500,000,000 feet or more of lumber than is used in New York state with a population of 11,000,000.

More than 6,000,000 motorists visited California national forests last year.

A complete mineral survey of Mariposa county is now being conducted by the State Mining bureau.

Only 140 women and 450 men out of a qualified group of 1300 applicants will be admitted to Stanford in the fall, according to notices sent out last week to the successful 590.

Customs collections in San Francisco last month totaled $1,120,254.49, compared with $1,052,994.49 in May, 1926. During the same month a decade ago the tariff duties collected amounted to $380,785.06.

Leighroy Miller, Porterville aviator and veteran of the World war, will attempt a flight from the Pacific coast to Tokio, Japan, if he can obtain $15,000 from his home city to finance preparations for the trip, he has announced.

Freshman hazing has been abolished by volunteer action of the students at the University of California at Los Angeles. There will be the annual class scrap, which will last half a day, but aside from that freshmen are to be unmolested.

The total budget of running expenses for the University of California for the coming year, exclusive of endowments, is $6,287,167. The fund comes out of state revenue and includes salaries for some 1,300 faculty members in addition to many other employes.

The national forests form the home of a part of all the large game found in California and contain, according to a wild life census made by forest service officials, 225,000 deer, 10,000 bear, 1,000 mountain sheep, 400 antelope and 150 elk. In addition there are large numbers of predatory beasts, including 50,000 coyotes, 22,000 lynx and wildcats and 2,000 mountain lions.

Just twenty-four hours after he was forced the first time in his life to forego the annual Memorial day pilgrimage to the graves of his former comrades, Abram B. Covalt, civil war veteran and oldest G. A. R. commander in the United States, who recently celebrated his one hundredth birthday, died May 31 of heart failure at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. L. Hamilton of Oakland.

Mrs. John Hammond Crabbe, formerly Miss Mary Freeman of Woodland, member of the family which founded Woodland, has been awarded a $35,000 damage judgment in San Francisco courts against Ira O. Rhoades, purchasing agent of the Southern Pacific company, held responsible for an automobile accident in which she was seriously injured. Mrs. Crabbe lost the sight of one eye.

Farwell Brown, editor of the Oroville "Mercury," and his mother, Mrs. Murat Brown, were found dead in their home one morning last week from asphyxiation. It is thought that Mrs. Brown, an invalid, succumbed to the gas fumes while she was preparing dinner. Her son, returning, found her, and carried her to the porch. Reentering the kitchen to turn off the stove, he is believed to have been overcome by the gas himself.

Revealing plans for construction of a great reservoir in French Meadows at a cost of approximately $10,000,000, John L. McNab, San Francisco attorney, has petitioned the state division of water rights for a permit to divert 200 second feet of water from the middle fork of the American river in Placer county, and to store 80,000-acre feet in the proposed reservoir. The project contemplates development of 75,000 theoretical horsepower of electric energy.

The Sespe Development corporation announced that it will build a suspended monorail system to connect Fillmore and Sespe Hot Springs, a distance of twenty miles through Sespe canyon. The line will carry both freight and passengers, the cars to run at a speed of 100 miles an hour. With the twenty-mile run taking less than twenty minutes officers of the corporation said that Fillmore and other parts of Ventura county would be brought within an hour's ride of Los Angeles.

Four years will be devoted to the establishment of a wild flower sanctuary in Yosemite valley surrounding the new $1,000,000 Ahwahnee hotel, according to the plans of Carl Purdy, naturalist of Ukiah. "We will attempt to recreate the natural meadow effect in front of the Ahwahnee," explained Purdy. "Hundreds of flowers which are native will be planted there. One side of the meadow will be a rock garden, which will include specimens of the wild flowers found in the higher altitudes."

"The Romance of the Redwoods," colorful outdoor drama featuring the beauties of the primitive woodlands, will be presented under the direction of Garnet Holme as the first annual Humboldt Redwood pageant in the natural redwood forest near Eureka on June 11 and 12. The redwoods play, embodying a woodland motive whose underlying story is the preservation of the giant trees, was written by Holme and Dan Totheroh, both noted for production of pageantry.

Building of a hotel and thirty cottages, nucleus of an exclusive "divorce colony," is proceeding at the south end of Lake Tahoe. The cottages are on the Nevada side of the boundary, with the inn squarely on the California-Nevada line. The project is designed to divert profits of the divorce business from Reno. Residents at the colony will be restricted to divorce seekers. Reno lawyers admit the three months' divorce law is not bringing the rush of business anticipated, and the Tahoe project has caused consternation in local business and legal circles.

Another important contribution to the early history of California is announced at the University of California in the publication by Professor Herbert E. Bolton of the diary notes of Fray Juan Crespi, the missionary explorer, who took part in the Portola expedition in the discovery of San Francisco bay and who drafted the first map of that harbor.

The salary of President W. W. Campbell of the University of California has been increased from $12,000 to $15,000 by the action of the Board of Regents, it has been announced by Comptroller R. G. Sproul.

Smith—Oh, my wife never sleeps.

So It Goes

"I offer you a lifelong devotion."

"Well, I'll marry you and we'll see. I'll put you on probation for, say, twenty years."

Gnawing Anxiety

"Blank and his wife are going to separate."

"I suppose he is worried over who will get his children."

"Not so much, I fancy, as over who will get his breakfast."

Long Enough

"How long have you known him?"

"Five years at 50 per cent."

Beyond His Powers

"So my wife has an idea that she must go to Palm Beach for her health. Isn't there some other remedy for her illness, doctor?"

"Yes; I can cure her illness, but I can't cure her of the idea."

Theoretically

"So you're Mr. Blank's secretary."

"No, his private secretary."

"What's the difference?"

"A private secretary knows more and tells less."

FAMOUS MINING STRIKES

By THOMAS E. STEWARD

The Story of Calumet & Hecla

THE famous "Calumet conglomerate," in which the equally celebrated Calumet and Hecla mines were sunk to become the largest and richest copper property in the world and to hold that rank for decades, was discovered in 1864 by a man named Edwin J. Hulbert. Hulbert was a surveyor, and it was a violent deflection of his surveyor's needle that put him on the alert for mineral discoveries. His first find, like that in the Minesota, was a huge block of copper in a depression which he took for an ancient pit. At his suggestion the tract was bought and the Calumet Mining company, afterwards Calumet and Hecla, was formed.

This company produced 8,747 tons of copper in the year 1872, only eight years after Hulbert's find, and in that year paid $2,800,000 in cash dividends.

Hulbert's discovery of this rich mine through a deflection of the surveyor's needle probably has caused many hundreds of men to waste lots of time looking for metallic ore by that method and it may have strengthened the erroneous beliefs of those who still think a hazel wand will locate precious metals. It is said to be a scientific fact that a surveyor's needle will fluctuate strongly when in the presence of very large masses of copper. But it must be borne in mind that no other such mass of pure copper as that of the Calumet and Hecla has ever been found in the history of the world. Much of the richest of this mine's copper has been extracted and it is now depending on much leaner ores and is washing old dumps and copper-bearing sands that were dumped into Lake Superior.

Improved mining methods in the copper country soon cut the cost of getting out the copper and added to the profits.

As an example of the hardships of early-day mining it is related that when the Huron Mining company decided to introduce steam power in one of its shafts it took ten days to move the equipment up the low hill in which the shaft descended. Rollers, blocks and tackle were used and the engine was pulled up by its own power. One Captain Bennett was in charge of the blocks. Suddenly Bennett was seen to rush off down hill swearing vigorously. No one knew what was the matter with him until the steam engineer reconnoitered at the place where Bennett had been working. There he found two of Bennett's fingers on the ground and knew what had been the matter with Bennett.

Four Gems in One

BESIDES the famous diamond fields of Brazil, South America has, in the Republic of Colombia, one of the principal world sources of emeralds, or green beryl.

Due to its antiquity and beauty, the emerald is by all odds the best known and most popular form of beryl, but as a matter of fact the stones known as aquamarine, aquamarine-chrysolite and golden beryl are chemically and geologically the same as the emerald, but with a different color. The first of these is pale blue or bluish green, the second, yellowish green and the last mentioned is bright yellow.

In ancient times the Romans believed the emerald to be a cure for eye diseases, due in all probability to the soothing effect of green light on the eye, just as red light is an irritant. This is said to have led to the first use of an eyeglass. Some Roman, who believed in the magic properties of the gem, had one cut to a shape that could be held over the eye, and, as luck would have it, it was cut into a lens that really enabled him to see better. This led to a correction of nearsightedness. Nero is said to have used an emerald eyeglass to watch the gladiatorial fights in the glaring light of the arena, just as we now look at the sun through a piece of smoked glass.

Emeralds were mined in Egypt as long ago as 1650 B. C. Ancient emeralds are also reputed to have come from India, but no modern deposit of them is known there, although that country produces aquamarines and other forms of beryl.

The Spanish believed that Peru contained every kind of wealth and long sought for emerald mines in that country of silver and gold, only to give it up at last. But to the north of Peru, in New Granada, now the Republic of Colombia, they discovered one of the richest emerald fields that has ever come to light. The Incas of Peru are said to have used as an idol an emerald the size of an ostrich egg. This, the natives said, was a mother emerald, to which "daughter emeralds" must be offered. The superstitious natives made due contributions and a splendid loot of gems was obtained by the conquerors. This gave rise to the term "Peruvian emerald" as a mark of particular excellence in the gems, but it is practically certain that all of these stones came from the Colombian fields.

Beryl occurs at a large number of places in North America, but chiefly in quantities and forms of interest to scientists and collectors rather than dealers. There are emeralds in South Carolina and beryls in New Hampshire and Connecticut.

China's Tallest Pagoda

The Great padoga of the Northwestern temple at Soochow is the tallest in China. The outer walls, which are carved, are 10 feet thick. Inside there is another pagoda which rises to the top of the first and in the space between the two are steps by which the traveler may ascend the nine stories. Each story has balconies and niches for stone images. From the top may be viewed the city, the ancient plan of which is still preserved in the temple.

The Power Of Publicity

THERE are narrow-minded individuals who claim that the cost of publicity is not a legitimate expense of public service corporations. Publicity which encourages the widest use of an article is the most potent influence to reduce the expense of that article to the consuming public. Without publicity, the demand for an article is small and the cost of production is high. With proper publicity the demand for an article becomes universal and the cost of production drops to a minimum.

That is why Americans enjoy the best public utility service in the world—utility companies are consistent users of advertising space. They have acquainted the people with every phase of their business and shown them the advantages of using electricity, gas, the telephone and street railway service. Their success is an outstanding example of the fact that advertising does pay when applied to an article or service of merit.—The Manufacturer.

"I believe in the country weekly newspaper. I believe that no printed matter in the United States is more thorougly read, or has more influence than the pages of these home town newspapers."

NO INCREASE IN JUVENILE SUICIDE RATE

By George A. Moore, M. D.
Palmer, Mass.
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

"Oh, Pompey, what de matter?
Oh, what de matter now?
De rooster am a crowin',
So am de brindle cow."

It is to be supposed that Pompey was mistaken about the brindle cow. It is unlikely that she did any crowing, but some statements are not so obviously untrue and are taken at face value when they really are merely echoes of contemporary happenings just as the brindle cow's crowing was suggested by the chanticleer's effort.

Juvenile suicide has been "played up" by the press. The circumstances attending some of these tragedies have been sufficiently spectacular and have lost nothing in the telling by clever news writers. The whole matter has seized the public mind; publicists are writing explanations of the "terrific increase" in the number of juvenile suicides.

The value of these explanations is somewhat dimished by one fact—there has been no increase in the juvenile suicide rate. The public does not know this. Probably the average reader never, until lately, knew of a case of suicide by a child, but scientists have, and they have studied the subject intensively as a part of the general subject of self destruction.

Professor E. G. Dexter, in April, 1901, then of the University of Illinois, published an account of his investigations of suicide. Pett published his table in the New York Medcal Journal, Dec. 22, 1900, which shows variation in number of suicides in the light and dark months. Col. Charles R. Greenleaf, one time chief surgeon in the Philippines, studied the phenoemna in those islands about the same time. There are much older studies, but these show that recent changes in methods of living, of study, or of religious views, cannot be held as fundamental in the cause of suicide, adult or juvenile.

It therefore would appear that those who explain the cause of the "great increase" in child suicide may be giving us mislabeled truths. Their explanations may fit the subject of juvenile suicide but not be entitled to much respect as an explanation of the "great increase," the "epidemic," or the "wave", because, like the crowing Pompey's cow, it just is not so.

Statistics show that for several years past about 25 juvenile suicides occurred every week. A greater number of juveniles in school now may make the student number of suicides greater than formerly. In this connection it is worth remembering that suicide is very common among the lower races where school experience is almost nil.

From seems adequate that in civilized countries more than fifty per cent of suicides is due to insanity and of the remainder mental disturbance of one sort of another in invariably the cause.

WHY GLASSES DO NOT CURE ALL CASES OF CROSS EYES

By Hamilton Stillson, M. D.
Seattle, Wash.
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

Frequently it is stated that "cross eyes" are curable by properly fitting glasses. From this the reader is apt to infer that all cases of cross-eyes are curable; and that if a case of cross-eyes is not cured by the glasses procured, the glasses are not properly "fitted."

So when you see an advertisement anywhere announcing that glasses can straighten cross-eyes you must not infer that they will surely straighten the crossed eyes of your little child.

All that glasses can do is to focus the rays of light in the formation of an image. They cannot make a blind person see. They cannot make a mind recognize the image nor direct the eyes properly if the mind is indifferent to the image.

The ability to use both eyes together in viewing the same object at the same time is a late acquirement in the evolutionary development of animals—man incuded. If became necessary for them to be able to judge distances accurately and so the eyes came to be used together in the formation of a "stereoscopic" image— a picture with depth and distance. This stereoscopic picture can be formed only by combining two images into one.

Many children are lacking in their ability to combine the two images into one picture. They lack "fusion sense," as the doctors say. If their eyes cross or turn outward, as sometimes happens, no glasses will avail to make them straight unless and until the mind tries to combine the two images.

So, too, many children have eyes set far apart on the face. Their eyes are harder to bring together into "single binocular vision" and will sometimes diverge. Glasses will not be satisfactory in these cases.

When there has been a defect in the nerve part of the eye, making a part of the retina blind at its central portion, the eyes will keep turning and waving from side to side to bring a healthy portion of the nerve around to a position where the light will strike it right. Of course glasses will not restore the dead nerve nor straighten the eyes.

A great many eyes are injured at childbirth. Such eyes cannot be expected to point correctly nor can glasses be expected to make them point straight.

Under these circumstances it is quite proper for you to take your child to a physician-oculist and let him find what defects there are besdes the need for glasses. You may be sure he will cure the cross eyes by means of glasses if he can; and that if he cannot do so he will tell you.

Mother Makes 'Em Best

by O. Lawrence Hawthorne

I guess 'most anybuddy's cake
An' cookies ain't so hard t' take
When boys an' girls 're comin' in from play;
But when I'm lookin' fer a treat
That nothin' else could ever beat,
I'll pick my Mother's cookies any day!

My Gran'ma makes 'em awful good,
An' lots o' times I wish I could
Be at her house t' eat 'em while they're hot.
Sometimes a neighbor-lady, too,
Is lucky, an' brings us a few—
But, gosh, our fam'ly always needs a lot!

When Mother hasn't any more,
Sometimes she buys some at the store,
But every kind tastes jes' like all the rest.
You bet yer neck I like the cake
An' cookies other people bake;
But my own Mother always makes 'em best!

'Y' CAMP OPEN TO ALL BOYS

Roy A. Hohberger, the local Y. M. C. A. Secretary, reports that applications for Camp Yu-Mi-Ci-A, the Y. M. C. A. boys' camp, located near the San Mateo County Park, are coming in daily.

Because of its location, type of program and leadership as well as the cost which is $10 for ten days, boys who have never been in camp before are being attracted to it.

The Y. M. C. A. seeks to serve all the boys of the community, whether they are members of Y. M. C. A. Clubs or not. Any boy of good character who agrees to abide by the rules of the camp is eligible.

Roy A. Hohberger will be camp director and George Chessum, executive secretary of the San Mateo Y. M. C. A., will be camp manager. Both of these men have had years of experience in handling boys' camps. In addition each tent will have an older leader in charge.

All activities of the camp are supervised. Two swimming periods a day are scheduled, with special attention to those who do not know how to swim. Activities include woodland golf, baseball, volley ball, horseshoes, archery, nature study, handicraft, water sports, campfire stunts, pageants, etc.

Further information can be secured by calling Redwood 974-J.

Why is Lettuce always shipped East with ICE

California ships out more than 36,000 carloads of lettuce annually, and every crate is packed with ICE. All attempts to ship lettuce by other kinds of refrigeration without ice have failed. The lettuce dried out and wilted because of too dry a temperature.

When shipped with ICE, the lettuce arrives in the East fresh, crisp and wholesome—even better than when it left California. That is because ONLY ICE gives exactly the proper temperature and humidity to keep delicate foods in perfect condition. This applies not only to lettuce, but to peas, cauliflower, artichokes, asparagus, sprouts, spinach and other vegetables.

The advantages of ice apply equally as well to home refrigeration. Ice not only provides the safest, simplest and cheapest way to preserve foods—it provides the best way.

Hurrah for Dad

Dad comes into his own this coming Sunday.

It's Fathers' Day by the ordainment of somebody who had a proper appreciation of just what a vital role "the old man" pays in this human scheme of things.

Being a humble and modest sort of creature, dad probably would have returned an emphatic negative, if they'd asked him if he wanted a day set apart for his special benefit. But they didn't consult him and so, for weal or for woe, he must take what comes along on Fathers' Day.

Giving dad a measure of the credit that is his due just one day of the year isn't such a bad idea, after all. All the other days of the year dad's working for almost everybody but himself. The baker and the milkman, the landlord and the coalman expect dad to do his duty no matter what happens. And dad usually comes through. Often it's a hard pull, often the road is a tough one but dad somehow hurdles the obstacles and measures up to the standards society has laid down for him.

So, Fathers' Day deserves recognition. For one day dad is entitled to the softest seat in the house. He's entitled to the best reading light and so forth!

ACTION BY GOVERNOR PROMOTES PROGRAM

The action of Governor Young in signing the Breed State Park bills means the development of a comprehensive State Park program for California. It means that the State will at once take steps to effect an efficient administration of its disorganized park properties by placing them under one commission empowered to preserve, protect, and administer them. It means further, that a comprehensive State Park plan will be developed under this commission through a park survey which they are empowerel to make during the next two years, and that the voters of the State will have the opportunity in November, 1928, of determining whether California shall carry out a $12,000,000 program for the preservation of its outstanding scenic and recreational areas, through the passage of a $6,000,000 bond issue to be matched with an equal amount raised by subscription.

This was the announcement this week from the headquarters of the California State Park committee, following the receipt of word that Governor Young had signed Senate Bills 439,440 and 441, introduced by Senator Arthur H. Breed and recently passed by the California State legislature.

"At last California is to make the most of one of her greatest assets," said Duncan McDuffie, chairman of the State Parks committee, which has conducted the campaign for the passage of the Park legislation and will be active in promoting the passage of the $6,000,000 bond issue. "Next to our fertile soil, California's greatest single asset is the opportunity the state offers for outdoor life. No industry except agriculture puts as much money into circulation in California as do hundreds of thousands of visitors who come here seeking after health, recreation, pleasure, sport and out-of-door life generally. Yet gradually many of the attractions that have made the state famous are being destroyed like our redwood groves, and are passing to private ownership like the Monterey Coast Line."

It is expected that as soon as organized, the new State Park commission will undertake the systematic survey of the state, as authorized by Senate bill 440, in order to determine what areas not now included in the State Park system should be so included. This survey will take into account the needs of the entire state of California from the standpoint of recreation and the preservation of outstanding areas of scenic, scientific and historic interest.

The present legislation is supported by the State Parks committee which represents many California organizations interested in conservation, recreation and outdoor life, including the Save-the-Redwoods League, the Sierra Club, the Automobile Club of Southern California, the Native Sons of the Golden West, the California State Automobile Association, the Calaveras Big Trees Association, the California State Parks Association, the Point Lobos Association, the State Federation of Women's Clubs, the League of California Municipalities, the Redwood Empire Association, the Associated Sportmen's Clubs, the Conservation Association of Southern California, and the California Development Association, the State Chamber of Commerce.

RANCHER'S LIFE SAVED BY TELEPHONE LINEMEN

A knowledge of first aid methods possessed by a crew of telephone linemen recently saved the life of Arthur Jahn, a rancher of Hellier road, near San Jose.

Jahn, working on a pump, caught his arm in a gas engine, severed an artery and sustained other injuries. He was in danger of bleeding to death. His wife, seeking assistance, shouted to Joe Reed, Ralph Childs and Emil Brady, a telephone company line crew working nearby.

The linemen rushed to the scene with their first aid kits and quickly applied emergency measures taught to telephone company employees. The flow of blood was stopped and Jahn was removed to a hospital in the lineman's truck. Jahn is now well on the way to recovery.

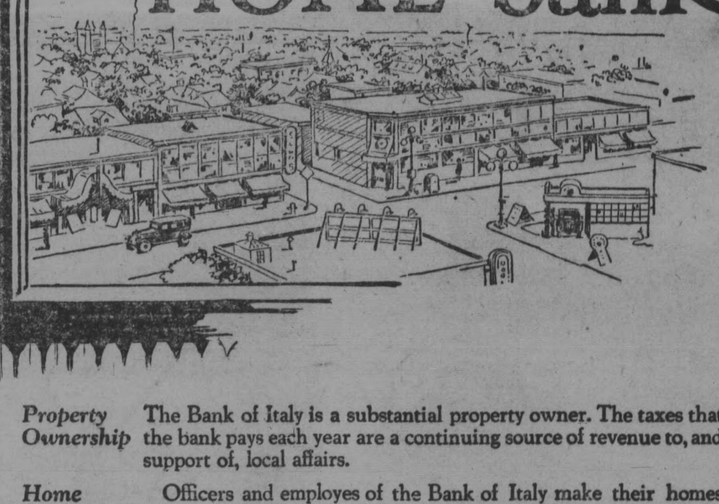
Salary of Sealer of Weights Fixed

One of the bills signed by Governor Young in the closing hours of his consideration of the work of the last legislature was that introduced by Senator Boggs of San Joaquin county, which fixed the salaries of the sealers of weights and measures in all counties of California except charter counties.

The salary fixed for the sealer of weights and measures in this county was $150 per month.

Our idea of a "HOME" bank



Property Ownership The Bank of Italy is a substantial property owner. The taxes that the bank pays each year are a continuing source of revenue to, and support of, local affairs.

Home Management Officers and employes of the Bank of Italy make their homes here: Real "Home Folks." They earn, and spend their money in this community.

Local Loans Money deposited with the Bank of Italy here, [as well as in the metropolitan centers of the state] is loaned when necessary to the people and business establishments of this city. Seasonal peak loaning requirements at this branch [if in excess of local deposits] can always be provided for.

Home Owned The people of this community are the stockholders of the Bank of Italy. They have invested their money in this institution because it is a community enterprise. As a matter of fact, the Bank of Italy has more stockholders—a more local and democratic ownership—than any other bank in California; or for that matter, in the entire United States.

Community Dividends Thousands of dollars in dividends are paid into this community every year, increasing to a considerable extent the volume of local business. Much of this money is earned elsewhere by the bank, and the payment to the people here is indeed a real source of added income.

Your Bank, wherever you go in California After all, California is one state and the Bank of Italy is the only financial institution that provides unified and uniform statewide banking service—affording metropolitan banking facilities in terms of local requirements, and with the real Home viewpoint.

FARMER WOMAN IN OKLAHOMA

Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Because It Gave Her Health and Strength

In a sunny pasture in Oklahoma, a herd of sleek cows was grazing. They made a pretty picture. But the thin woman in the blue checked apron sighed as she looked at them. She was tired of cows, tired of her tedious work in the dairy. She was tired of cooking for a houseful of boarders, besides caring for her own family. The burdens of life seemed too heavy for her failing health. She had lost confidence in herself.

One day she began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and her general health began to improve. She took it faithfully. Now she can do her work without any trouble, sleeps well and is no longer blue and timid.

This woman, Mrs. Cora Short, R. R. 9, Box 387, Oklahoma City, Okla., writes: "Everybody now says: 'Mrs. Short, what are you doing to yourself?' I weigh 135 and my weight before I took it was 115. I have taken seven bottles of the Vegetable Compound."

Other women who have to work hard and keep things going may find the road to better health as Mrs. Short did, through the faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Workers Finding More Time for Recreation

The five-day week has been a bugbear to many an employer, but think how near we have come to it already. A hundred years ago the workman labored for 12 hours a day for six days a week, and in return got shelter, food and clothing and not much of any of them. Now, in many industries, the 44-hour week is common, so that the step to 40 hours is short.

And the employers' habits have changed. The afternoon off for golf, the winter vacation in addition to one in the summer, the week-end that begins on Friday afternoon—how many are shocked by these?

The sage Jacob Ruppert, owner of the New York American league baseball team, thinks his possession worth $3,000,000, due to the added leisure of Americans. And golf, he says, has added to the attendance at baseball parks. Interest in one has aroused interest in the other.—Nation's Business.

New York Planning to Put Streets on Roofs

New York city talks of a 16-mile roadway to be built on the roofs of 12-story buildings from the lower part of the city to Yonkers. Gotham's traffic problem is costing the city a million and a half dollars a day. This elevated highway on the roofs would be a motor-express thoroughfare. The man living out of town could motor down to his work without interference of cross-traffic and park his car on the roof of the building in which he makes his living. The improvement would soon pay for itself. Part of the plan calls for a series of moving platforms for pedestrians, along the second floor, the platforms running from a speed slow enough to step on easily, up to 20 miles an hour, to provide free transit on two new north and south avenues. It all reads like an H. G. Wells novel, but it may be realized.—Capper's Weekly.

Making Use of Maps for Dress Patterns

Old maps are amusing and interesting, says the Paris correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. Whether they will be altogether suitable as patterns for dresses remains to be seen, The French couturiers, who have ransacked the world for ideas, have now hit upon the notion of designing geographical frocks. They have taken the Sixteenth and Seventeenth century maps and propose to convey their quaint colors and contours to silks and satins. Afternoon and evening robes are dotted with many-starred mariners' compasses and little images indicating winds.

Sometimes the new frocks are covered with wavy seas and tree-bearing islands, but others are simply bordered with map scales. The firm which first thought of this ornamentation made a large collection of early travel books containing primitive maps. It is said that the new models have been favorably received by the "trade."

That's All

The daughter of the house had taken delight in listening to her father dictate the cryptic words of a telegram over the phone. Later that day at the supper table she was making a detailed explanation of something to her mother. Her father asked her, when she had stopped talking, whether she had anything more to say.

"No," she replied, "that's all there is. Period. Stop."

Big Colonies for Brazil

The average income of people gainfully employed in this country is now about $2,000 a year.

CHAPTER XIV

—17—

Selwood Finds Christie.

The barber-shop was dark. "What are you looking for," asked Barbanet, lazily sarcastic; "soap or towels?"

"Two men with shotguns," retorted Selwood, while Page fished a match from his pocket and lighted a lamp. "It may be they're in the back room; push ahead; open that door in front of you."

"Another man's got the key to that door," asserted Barbanet, surly now. "You'll have to talk to Starbuck about that."

Selwood, without raising his tone, tried out a double-edged bluff—one that would work either way. "Bull!" he said. "Go back to Starbuck. Tell him Barbanet wants the key to the barber-shop back room. He may give you an evasive answer. If he does, tell him Barbanet is in trouble in the barber-shop and says to give you the key or come a-running if he wants to save what's in the back room."

"If he follows you back, Bull," continued Selwood carelessly, "come as far as the door with him. Keep out of the shop here till the smoke settles."

Bull nodded. "I understand."

"If you know what's good for your hide, Bull," interposed Barbanet, "don't take any talk like that to Cliff Starbuck. Don't play traitor to Starbuck. He'll kill you—or I will."

"Why, Harry," said Bull Page, asserting what manhood Barbanet's whisky had left him—and though his deep, throaty voice shook, there was no hesitation, no fear in his utterance—"what do you think you're talking about? Do you think I'm afraid of you—or your kind? What have you ever done for me but fill me with poison when I come to town with money from the mines, you snake!" exclaimed Bull, gathering force with his invective. "Where did I go for a grub stake when I was hungry? To John Selwood!"

"Oh, shut up, Bull," blurted out Selwood. "Get out! And get back here quick with that key or with Starbuck."

"I'm flyin' right now, John. Do you know what this rat asked me to do a few minutes ago? To knock old man Fyler on the head and throw him in the river—that's all."

With this parting shot, Bull was opening the door through which they had come in. Barbanet saw the jig was up. "Hold on," he said, bitterly sulky, "call off your rabbit. That key will unlock either door."

Bull lost no time in starting for the inner door. "Stop a minute, Bull," interposed Selwood; "take those aprons on that chair to tie this fellow up with before you open the door. Got 'em? Now put out lights and unlock."

Page threw the back door open. Light streamed into the barber-shop from a lamp set on an up-ended barrel in the apparently empty room. Silence greeted the opening. Selwood pushed his sullen prisoner forward across the threshold. A suppressed cry acknowledged the sight of him. "Harry Barbanet!" exclaimed an unsteady voice. "What do you mean by keeping us locked here all this time? You promised we should be free in a few minutes. When are we to get out?"

Margaret Hyde stood to the left of the doorway; and clinging with clasped hands to Margaret's arm, hatless and shrinking under a cape, her eyes filled with fear, Selwood saw Christie Fyler.

Christie's startled glance fell on him. Of all men, she would have wished to identify Selwood last, despite what had passed between them, with these detestable surroundings in which she was held prisoner. To see him suddenly in this forbidding place in company with the ruthless tool of the man she had now so much reason to fear, was like rudely stripping her of what faith she had left in men. It was hardly a moment before the situation cleared, but for Christie it was a painful moment.

Barbanet halted before Margaret's question. He nodded coolly back over his shoulder. "I ain't bossing this procession." He spoke with a contemptuous spite. "This man with the gup is running things—for a few minutes—talk to him."

Barbanet's words directed all eyes on Selwood. He spoke to Margaret Hyde. "If you are kept here against your wills, you're free to go now—or will be in a minute. This is a good place to get away from. It will be burned before daylight."

"They dragged us here," exclaimed Christie. "They threatened to kill us."

"Who is 'they'?" asked Selwood.

Margaret hesitated. "All of these men," interposed Christie, tremulous and eager. She pointed to Barbanet. "This man, and most of all—Starbuck. It was he who had us brought to this vile place," repeated Christie, with gathering anger and courage. "We don't know yet why we should be locked up in this way. Who are all these men we hear in the next room? That man"—she pointed her finger, with flashing eyes, at Barbanet—"and another tried to drag me here, alone. Margaret wouldn't let them—they almost tried to kill my father!"

Selwood stood the sullen bartender facing the wall with his hands up. "I'll have a job for you in a minute, Barbanet," said Selwood in an undertone. "You may want to save your own skin with it. When these people get out of here, you can take word in to Starbuck he's cornered. Lefever's men have surrounded this place, and they're out to get him and his crew for burning their bunk-house. Starbuck can either fight, or come out and talk. If he fights, there won't be any talk—not so far as I know. If he doesn't come out he'll be burnt out. If he fights, he—and the rest of you—will get the rope."

He turned away without waiting for an answer. Bull Page had unbarred and knocked, the rim lock off the flimsy back door, and opened it. Pardaloe, waiting impatiently in the dark, and itching to train the big shotgun on somebody, loomed up in the doorway.

"They're here," he said to Selwood significantly. He looked enviously at Selwood's victim, standing with his face to the wall—he offered so tempting a cushion for a handful of buckshot—but was appeased when Selwood seriously put on him the responsibility of taking the three refugees through the burnt district to the barn.

Christie, listening eagerly to all the words passed, edged up so she could ask Selwood a question apart. "You are not coming?"

He hesitated as she spoke, and looked at her almost curiously. The old fever in his blood rose at the sight of her. But pride ruled his will and Christie, looking questioningly up at him as if he, too, longed to say and to hear more, saw nothing of what was hidden behind the unbending expression. "Not yet," was all he said when he answered. "But you oughtn't to lose a minute—follow Pardaloe and keep close to him."

Pardaloe himself seemed in haste. "Don't lose no time, Christie," he urged; "come along!"

She could not be hurried. "Then surely," she faltered to Selwood, "I shall see you again tonight—to—to say something—to thank you for—"

Selwood held on to his words as if they were diamonds. "Glad to do it," he murmured, stubbornly laconic.

His gaze was so steady that her eyes fell. However, she would not give up—and when she looked at him again her eyes were glistening a little. "I know I hurt you terribly," she began. He offered nothing to help her out. "I did not want to," she persisted, resolved to soften him. "Can't you—come with us now?"

It was his turn to squirm. He did not risk his eyes directly on hers—only repeated, almost mechanically, "Not yet."

"Are you going to—to fight?" She could hardly breathe the hateful word between her reluctant lips.

"I may have to." Without looking at her, he raised his hand toward the open door. "Follow Pardaloe."

She made her last appeal—save, perhaps, that deepest appeal that until now had lain unspoken in her eyes. But Christie could say things, too. As she stepped toward the door her eyes flashed back at him. "If I didn't fear endangering your life—I'd stay anyway!"

The suddenness, the surprise, the intimate defiance, brought the carefree old laugh for a moment to Selwood's lips—the laugh of the summer auction days, the laugh that Christie remembered and had missed so long. But without giving him time for a word she stepped out into the night. It was not till then that he imagined he heard in the darkness something like a suppressed sob.

With Christie on the way to safety and Lefever's men at his call, Selwood started Barbanet back to Starbuck.

But Barbanet had only disappeared when Selwood heard a woman's scream. Christie had but just crossed the other threshold—it was her voice.

He sprang out of the open back door and ran around to the front. In the street, lighted by the gray gleam of daybreak, he saw a little group of struggling figures. To his left, out of the wide-open doors of Bartoe's place, Starbuck's men were crowding. What Selwood feared had happened: a door guard, freeing himself, had given the alarm. As they ran out they were met with the gun-fire of Lefever's men, and in what seemed no more than a second the two parties were at grips with clubs and guns.

Before Selwood could dash across the sidewalk, the group in the street was surrounded by a crowd of yelling men. In the thick of it Selwood made out Pardaloe, whirling about like a bear and furiously shaking off a man who clung to his back; a second man, gun in hand, jumped around the two, evidently trying to shoot the mule boss without hitting his assailant; Christie, screaming, her father, and Bull Page urging her away, stood by, wringing her hands. And at that moment an active man, dashing out of Bartoe's and brandishing a revolver, ran between Christie and her protectors and caught her up with his free arm.

Had the confusion been less, had the uncertain light been less certain, Selwood would have been at no loss to recognize this man; the commonest instinct in the nature of men would have declared Starbuck to him in the man assailing Christie. He did not realize that smoke was now rising about Bartoe's place, that Pardaloe had made good his threat to burn it, and that the men running out of the door were crying "Fire!" He had eyes for no one but Starbuck and heard nothing but Christie's angry, rebellious cries as she struggled to free herself. And he ran toward her with an answering cry.

Starbuck saw him leap into the street; and, still holding the frantic girl, he brought down his gun like a flash on Selwood.

It was a reckless, a useless shot. With Christie fighting him with her puny fists, the bullet flew wide. Not deigning to reply, not even drawing his own gun, but maddened to fury, Selwood dashed forward; before Starbuck could pull up and cover the second time, the gambler was on him. Bull Page had caught Christie by the wrist and was dragging her away. She screamed at Bull and resisted him. She tried to get back to where she knew a deadly moment had come between the man she hated and the man she loved; but she could not.

Pardaloe, like a beleaguered giant, had shaken off his enemies, recovered his shotgun, and above the sputtering crack of revolvers, its roar sounded on Christie's ears. Then, clubbing the gun and shouting imprecations at his enemies, the mule boss swept an open space between them and the two men who, locked in a death struggle, rolled in the middle of the street.

Despite a terrific blow across the head from the flat of Selwood's revolver, Starbuck's weight and bulk had borne the gambler to the ground; and Starbuck, to avoid a fatal dexterity with the same revolver, had clinched with him.

Neither of the infuriated men—seasoned to death grips—wasted another instant trying to shoot. But Starbuck had a further resource lacking to his enemy. Selwood knew precisely what it was—the deadliest of weapons in a clinch. He knew as grips, like lightning, shifted, eyes strained in fury, blows rained remorselessly, and the gage of life and death slipped from hand to hand, precisely what Starbuck was trying to do—he knew almost precisely where the heavier man carried the coveted weapon, and now not one man but two were exhausting every resource of strength and stratagem to reach the haft of Starbuck's bowie-knife at his hip.

It was an unequal struggle. Starbuck's weight and strength almost continually overbore the gambler's agility. Each advantage for the mastery hard-gained by Selwood was soon lost to the heavier defense of Starbuck. With Pardaloe's piercing eyes taking note of every turn, he could see but one hope for the lighter man, a hope that vanished when Selwood seemed weakening. If Starbuck's wind should outlast the other—Selwood, Pardaloe told himself, could not win.

So deep had become this conviction that more than once Pardaloe would have interfered, would have knocked Starbuck on the head or rammed him with his gun-stock—would have taken for himself the badge of disgrace from the wrought-up teamsters, watching—had he not known that Selwood, living or dead, would never forgive a stigma put on him by the aid of a friend. With hungry eyes and ears, the powerful mule boss watched the doubtful issue and listened to the sharp, broken breaths of the struggling men. But again and again Starbuck would roll his enemy under, only to have Selwood squirm free and slip himself out.

The contest fast narrowed to one point—the possession of the knife. Pardaloe saw and he understood; his fingers itched and his muscles twitched in his fever to pass his own knife into Selwood's hand; and almost as if timed to the last moment of the encounter, Starbuck, once more freeing his right hand, restrained till then by Selwood's left, slipped it from the leash of muscles, and whipped out his knife.

But in gaining this deadly advantage he had laid himself open to an unlooked-for danger. As a boxer, defeated in every tactic of defense, sees himself going and turns to the attack, Selwood's right hand, releasing Starbuck's left, shot out and clutched Starbuck's windpipe. The sinewy fingers closed relentlessly on Starbuck's throat, and, squirming from under him, Selwood threw himself across his enemy and overlay the arm slashing at him with the knife. Pardaloe, wild with anxiety, knew the end was in sight. But could Starbuck inflict a fatal injury before he should succumb to the grip that had cut off his breath?

Throwing himself frantically about as he felt consciousness going, striking blindly at Selwood from the forearm, Starbuck tried to land a fatal thrust. But Selwood, as Starbuck, plunging and rearing, slammed him from side to side to shake loose the deadly grip, took the slashing as best he could, clinging all the while like a panther at the throat of his foe.

Above the din about him, Pardaloe shouted and yelled. Hope had returned. He saw how the fight went. And, stamping his clumsy feet in a frenzy, he watched Selwood's left elbow gradually straighten and saw his left hand slide slowly, unevenly, but certainly up to Starbuck's right wrist. Again the two men meshed Pardaloe could see their straining muscles shiver in a climax of struggle. Then, Selwood had wrested the haft of the knife from his strangled foe, let go his throat, and raised his arm to strike.

Not till then did Pardaloe jump in. He caught the uplifted arm. The gambler, covered with blood, looked angrily up. "Not yet, John," cried the big fellow, low and ferociously. "Hang him!"

Panting as if dazed, Selwood looked again to see who spoke. The voice that entered his ear sent no message to his brain. He shook away the matted hair that fell before his eyes. Pardaloe, gripping his arm, looked intently at him and repeated his words. Whether Selwood understood or not, he knew Pardaloe. He looked down on his gasping enemy, and, stretching out his left hand, laid the ugly knife in Pardaloe's hand.

With a cracked laugh, he staggered to his feet, groping about with his hands for support.

Pardaloe steadied him. "Cut much, John?" he asked, bending anxiously over him.

"Why—no." Trying to pull himself together, Selwood panted the words. "I guess—not."

"You're chipped a little," commented Pardaloe, taking hold of his blood-soaked left arm and peering with melancholy sympathy into the strained eyes.

With the fingers of his left hand, Selwood felt uncertainly around his heart. "One jab," he said, breathing hard, "I thought went through me. His grip must have slipped," he added, as his fingers ran vacantly over his chest, trying to find a particular spot, "or something—turned the knife. What's here, Bill?" he asked, feeling blindly at the slit breast-pocket of his woolen shirt.

Pardaloe set down his lantern, and, using both hands on the slashed pocket, succeeded in fishing out the remains of a pack of cards. He stooped to examine the cards by the light of the lantern; the point of Starbuck's knife had gone half way through them. "My cards, by gum!" exclaimed Pardaloe, as his face fell. "Plum' cut to pieces, too. That deck ain't worth shucks to nobody now—look at 'em!" He held the pack up for inspection and looked indignantly down at Starbuck, whose wrists and ankles were already bound by Lefever and Scott. "No matter, old boy," he growled; "we'll fix you in a minute so you won't cut up no more cards for nobody."

Such of Starbuck's following as could escape the clutches of Lefever's angry men were scattering in the thickets along the river, where most of them had horses hidden, and by fording or swimming the stream could spur out on the Sinks for Calabasas.

Smoke was billowing from the doors and windows of Bartoe's place. Flames were lighting for the last time the interior of the empty barroom and licking its evil trappings. Selwood, steadied by Pardaloe, looked blankly at the scene before him and backed away.

The teamsters were dragging off their prisoners. In the crowd that closed in on the scene there rose up sudden bosses, and a confusion of orders as to how Starbuck should be disposed of. In the midst of the shouting, jostling throng, Selwood stood once more clear-headed. When a cry arose to run Starbuck to a telegraph pole, he intervened. "Hands off," he said. "This man is my prisoner. Take him to the barn, Pardaloe, with the others—and hold him till I get there."

CHAPTER XV

The Padre.

Torn by anxiety and racked with fears, Christie hovered as long as she could on the edge of things. But poor Bull Page, with more sense of the fitness of things than should be expected, refused her entreaties that she be allowed to see Selwood. "You two," he suggested to Christie and Margaret, when with Fyler they reached the hotel, "get into the kitchen and get some coffee going for the bunk-house boys. If they hadn't got out when they did, there wouldn't be any hotel now. Them fellows sent word to Carpy that if he didn't come down to Bartoe's to look after their wounded men, they'd burn the hotel on him; he told 'em—well, to burn and be hanged."

Selwood walked to the hotel. He had hardly thrown himself on his bed when Carpy's boisterous tread could be heard on the stairs, and the next minute Selwood was in the hands of the rough, cheerful surgeon—most cheerful now, for the night skies had cleared, and cleared his way.

While Carpy, with Scott helping him, was dressing the wounds, Pardaloe came in to see how Selwood came on and give him the news. Atkins had been killed in the street fight. Barbanet, sullen, and Bartoe, struggling and screaming, had been cruelly dragged from the barn to the fate of their kind. "Abe Cole," said Pardaloe in reciting the incident, "wanted me to go 'long and sit on the court. 'No,' I says, 'I won't sit on no court for nobody.' 'Why not?' says he. 'Why not?' says I. 'Why, dash it, before they get through they might take it into their heads to hang me!" McAlpin, Pardaloe continued, had prevented "the boys" from taking out Big Haynes.

"The boys aren't afraid of McAlpin, are they?" asked Selwood, watching Carpy's bandaging.

"No," thundered Pardaloe mildly. "But he's got Haynes hid and they can't find him."

"I don't think it right to hang him," said Carpy. "He's nothing like as bad as the others. Haynes claims Atkins and Bartoe threatened to kill him if he didn't turn in with them."

Scott proved a good assistant. But when Carpy had finished and Pardaloe was still talking, the Indian regarded Selwood with a peculiar smile. There were many lights and shades in Bob Scott's very homely smile, many varieties of meaning—and those who knew him well could read them pretty well. Selwood, taking keen note again of what was going on around him, perceived that the smile meant news; but the wounded man was too used up to ask for it. He only looked his own inquiry into his retainer's eyes and waited for him to speak.

The half-breed, treading about the room even in boots almost as lightly and silently as his moccasined kind, gathering up the odds and ends of Carpy's work, did not lose his smile of import, nor did Selwood's expression lose its demand for information.

A Heroic Remedy

It was a dark night. Murky clouds obscured the moon in such a way as to make driving dangerous in the uncertain light.

A car was approaching the level crossing, traveling swiftly round the corner which led to the closed gates. At that precise moment an express train thundered through.

Too late, the driver of the car saw his danger. He tried to swerve, but a skid was the only result. With a loud crash he struck the last coach, and the car crumpled up on the track.

Silence for a few minutes. Then a voice:

"Well, it's cured my hiccups, anyway."—and the driver crawled out of the wreck.

Unsinkable Rope

A fiber rope that is unsinkable has been produced in Holland. The rope includes a core of "foam rubber" that has a specific gravity only one-fourth as great as that of cork.

POULTRY

YOUNG GOSLINGS NEED GOOD CARE

When the goslings are raised in brooders they must be closed up at night for the first two or three weeks. After that they may be allowed to come and go if their pen is safe from dogs and other prowlers. Their run should be so arranged that they will have plenty of grass.

By the time the goslings are a month old they will have reached a size which is comparable to small hens and may then be given wide range or be kept confined in yards where grass is available. If the grass in their yards gets eaten down it is necessary to supplement it with waste from the garden, lawn clippings or similar green stuff. On such feed the goslings will make good gains but the addition of a little grain is advisable.

Water for drinking should always be available for the goslings. While they are small the vessel should be protected so they cannot get into it. While the weather is cool it is well to provide water only for drinking. After the weather settles and becomes warm there is no harm in giving them water so they can splash around in it.

Stale bread or a mash comprised of corn meal and shorts are the feeds most often used to supplement the grass ration of little goslings. Others use a more complete mash similar to that fed to chickens which contains animal food, skim milk or some other milk products.

The profit in raising geese comes from the fact that they are great foragers and make the bulk of their gain on feed that is otherwise unsalable. It is a mistake to try to raise them largely on a grain ration which increases the expense; besides, they do not do so well as when given more forage.

What Good Hen Consumes During Course of Year

What one good hen eats in a year was shown by the poultry department of the Minnesota College of Agriculture in an exhibit at the Minnesota state fair. Of scratch grain she consumes 20 pounds cracked corn, 10 pounds oats, 10 pounds barley. Her laying mash, which is fed in a hopper, totals 8 pounds each of corn meal, ground oats, wheat bran, wheat middlings, and beef scraps with the addition of 1 per cent charcoal and 1 per cent salt. She eats 4 pounds of oyster shells and 2 pounds of grit fed separately in a hopper. Her feed bill totals $15.23 a year.

If she eats she must more than pay her board bill, says the poultry department, and they showed the yearly egg production of four different hens: 1, pays board and little more; 2, pays board and 90 cents; 3, pays board with $1.80; 4, pays board and $4.70.

Poultry Facts

Milk is a valuable feed for hens.

* * *

Hens should have vigor and good size before they lay.

* * *

Ducks or geese should be killed by sticking in the back of the mouth.

* * *

Hard luck may be an alibi, but it isn't always an excuse.

* * *

Giving the chicks some form of milk at the start stimulates their appetite and promotes growth.

* * *

It's a good plan to start culling the flock with the chicks, by killing the weak, sickly ones that will never repay their cost.

* * *

The way brooder chicks act in the evening is a good guide as to the heat. If too much, they will crowd away from the hover, and if too little they will crowd up near the stove.

* * *

Free range away from the poultry yard should be provided with access for pasture whenever possible. It is the best known way to get strong, healthy, vigorous pullets for winter laying.

* * *

The main reason for the variation in the prices of eggs and dressed poultry is the variation in their quality.

* * *

Exercise generates heat and promotes health. Make the poultry do some work for their grain by feeding it in a deep, clean litter of straw.

* * *

Eggs for hatching should not be kept longer than 10 to 14 days before setting. They should be held at a temperature between 40 and 50 degrees Fahrenheit and turned once each day.

* * *

Many people make a mistake in not getting the brooder house thoroughly warm before putting in young chicks.

* * *

Eggs from a well-bred, uniform flock of some one breed will be more uniform in color and should bring more per dozen than a mixed lot.

* * *

If you have surplus milk, by all means give it to the hens. If it is sour or is in the shape of buttermilk from the churn, so much the better. Milk is a good food besides being a great health promoter.

* * *

Plenty of heat is necessary in order to make brooding successful. But ever this does not mean that chicks should be cooked. A temperature of 100 degrees should be maintained at the edge of the hover during the first week.

* * *

Some people try to be too good to their chicks and like food more than they often do more harm than good. One of the most common causes of trouble with brooder chicks is to have the brooder overheated or overcrowded.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Capt. Lindbergh Is Recipient of Unprecedented Honors in France.

THE notable event of the week ending May 27 was the completion of Capt. Charles Lindbergh's successful crossing by airplane from New York to Paris at 10:21, Paris time, Saturday night, May 21, after 33 hours 29 minutes in the air.

Paris gave the intrepid American flyer a wildly enthusiastic reception, in which there was no evidence of the reported enmity for American contestants in this transoceanic air race that had resulted in the loss of two French flyers, Captains Nungesser and Coli. From the moment his plane came to a stop on Le Bourget flying field, just outside the French capital, he became the acclaimed hero of the civilized world. In Paris no such tumultuous scenes have been witnessed since the signing of the armistice at the close of the World war, and for the week following the landing he has been sought for and feted by all classes. The king of Belgium wired him an invitation to be his guest at Brussels, King George of England extended him an invitation to visit him in London, organizations of many kinds contended for the honor of being host to him; the French government conferred upon him the medal of the Legion of Honor. From Captain Lindbergh's own countrymen came hundreds of offers of employment at fabulous salaries. Motion picture producers, vaudeville theater managers, managers of lecture courses, offered large sums for his services, and if he wishes, it is estimated that he could within the next twelve months easily make a million dollars as a result of his heroic exploit. So far he has refused to consider any of the offers, asserting that he had no idea of commercializing the flight which he made solely for the purpose of advancing the science of aviation.

It is not known at this writing when he will return to America. Before doing so he will accept the invitation from the kings of Belgium and England and will visit Stockholm and other European cities. The United States government has offered to bring him back on board a battleship as the guest of the American people and it is probable that he will accept this invitation.

Captain Lindbergh covered the distance from San Diego, Calif., to Paris —6,725 miles—in actual flying time of 56 hours and 46 minutes. He left San Diego, Calif., on the afternoon of May 10 and arrived in St. Louis—1,600 miles—the next day. After a rest there he hopped to New York—900 miles—crossing the American continent in an actual flying time of 23 hours and 15 minutes. After a few days' rest he started from New York to Paris—3,660 miles. This is a new world's record for nonstop straight line distance, the previous record being 3,400 miles.

ANOTHER event of importance in the field of aviation was the attempted flight of the Italian aviator, Francesco de Pinedo, from Newfoundland to the Azores islands, a distance of 1,200 miles. He left Trepassey Bay, N. F., Monday morning, May 23, but became lost in the fog and landed on the ocean some 300 miles from his objective point and his plane was towed into port by a sailing vessel that had picked him up.

A MOVE of unusual importance in the field of international relations was the break between Great Britain and Soviet Russia following the revelations resulting from the raiding by the British government of Arcos, Ltd., the Russian trading company operating in England, and the official Soviet trade delegation. In the house of commons Prime Minister Baldwin announced that on the basis of Sir Windham Child's findings in documents seized in the raid on May 12 the British government had decided to break off diplomatic relations with Russia.

In his address the prime minister referred at length to the documentary evidence of the Soviet internationale's network of Bolshevist plots in England, the United States, Canada, New Zealand, and said:

"In the face of these breaches of the trade agreement and international comity, his majesty's government has shown patience and forbearance which is probably without parallel.

"Diplomatic relations when thus deliberately and systematically abused are in themselves a danger to peace, and his majesty's government therefore has decided that unless the house expresses disapproval on Thursday, the government will terminate the trade agreement, require the withdrawal of the trade delegation and Soviet mission from London, and recall the British mission from Moscow."

"The Soviet government itself cannot escape the responsibility for the action of the trade delegation and the abuse of the facilities afforded it," the prime minister continued, "but the matter does not rest there, because it is difficult to believe that, while one organ of the Soviet government was breaking its solemn undertaking, the Soviet mission and Soviet government did not pass on these proceedings."

The prime minister explained that the police for months had been watching the activities of the Soviet secret agents who had arranged for photographing secret documents in the Soviet house. Their suspicions were confirmed early this year when two British subjects employed by the air force were discovered stealing two documents for the Reds, he said.

Mr. Baldwin then referred to a "further document of an official and highly confidential character," which turned up missing and which was discovered by the police to have been photographed on the Arcos premises. Armed with this knowledge, the police staged a raid, going straight to the subterranean photostat room, where they found a cipher clerk known to be connected with the secret agents.

Documents found in another room showed that this clerk's chief function was the carrying out of secret communications abroad. In his possession were found codes in envelopes addressed to well-known Communist individuals and organizations in England and the United States. The envelopes contained directions from the Red internationale to Communists and organizations in both countries.

"The investigation shows," said Mr. Baldwin, "that both Arcos and the trade delegation habitually used subversive propaganda. The correspondence dealt with the Communist seamen's club, the 'hands off' China movement, the anti-trade union bill, the distribution of Communist propaganda and industrial affairs in America."

This action on the part of the British government means again outlawing Russia in the family of nations, and the lining up of England with the United States in its attitude toward the Soviet government. The American government has consistently refused to recognize in any way the Soviet government of Russia on the basis that that government was engaging in propaganda with the purpose of undermining other governments with which friendly relations had been perfected. This government has refused to permit any official representative of the Soviets to land in the United States, and this investigation on the part of England has demonstrated the wisdom of the officials at Washington.

SECRETARY of the Treasury Mellon has announced the resignation of Assistant Secretary L. C. Andrews, effective August 1. At the same time announcement was made of the appointment of Dr. James M. Doran as prohibition commissioner to succeed Roy A. Haynes. The resignation of Mr. Andrews was unexpected. Secretary Mellon announced that he has recommended to President Coolidge the appointment of Seymour Lowman, former lieutenant governor of New York, to succeed him.

It was indicated by Mr. Mellon that while the new assistant secretary of the treasury will have supervisory authority over the bureau of prohibition, as well as over the bureau of customs and the coast guard, he will not have such broad powers as Mr. Andrews.

Doctor Doran, it was stated, will have full authority as prohibition commissioner, although general determination of policies will remain in the hands of the secretary of the treasury. The date of Haynes' retirement was not indicated.

GERMANY claims that with the recent blowing up of the 27 concrete dugouts on its frontier at Koenigsberg it has completed the disarmament provided for by the Versailles treaty, and is now demanding that the allied troops evacuate the Rhineland provinces. The allies are insisting that the interallied military commission must inspect the work of dismantling the fortresses, but Germany holds that the interallied military control commission expired on February 1, as promised by the allies, and that for reasons of prestige, Germany cannot permit a renewal of the interallied control. There the matter stands with nothing definite as to when the remaining French troops will march out of Germany.

FLOODS continue to ravage Louisiana parishes. Five additional parishes, with an area of 1,100,000 acres, and the homes of 80,000 people were thrown open to invasion by the inland sea when the river tore aside the protection barriers at McCrea and spread over the low lands of Pointe Coupee parish. Before the flood waters have vanished into the Gulf of Mexico they will have cut a path 50 miles wide and 200 miles long from the Arkansas border to the gulf.

AT WASHINGTON Justice William Hitz sentenced Harry F. Sinclair, millionaire oil operator, to serve three months in jail and to pay a fine of $500 for contempt of the United States senate in refusing to answer questions in connection with the investigation of the Teapot Dome lease scandal in 1924. The sentence was more severe than had been generally expected by those who have followed the case and who did not believe that the term of imprisonment would exceed the minimum of one month which had been imposed, in an earlier case, on Elverton R. Chapman, a New York stock broker, in 1896. In sentencing Sinclair, Justice Hitz declared that he believed the decision of the United States Supreme court in the Mal Daugherty case was binding on him.

Pending an appeal to the United States Supreme court Sinclair was released on $5,000 bail.

PAYNE WHITNEY, prominent sportsman, one of the richest of Americans, son of the late William C. Whitney and brother of Harry Payne Whitney, died suddenly May 26 on the tennis court of his country home at Manhasset, L. I., of acute indigestion.

Payne Whitney was born in New York 51 years ago, the second son of William C. Whitney. Like his father and elder brother, he went to Yale, where he was graduated in 1898. While there he achieved fame as an oarsman and was captain of his college crew.

After leaving Yale he took a law course at Harvard, and in 1902 he married Miss Helen Hay, daughter of the late John Hay, secretary of state and at one time ambassador to Great Britain.

Mr. Whitney was for many years a power in financial circles, although comparatively little was heard of him in that field. He was an active philanthropist in a generous but unostentatious way, so that almost nothing was known of his benefactions.

Wall street estimates his wealth as more than $300,000,000, basing the estimate on the income-tax payments that Mr. Whitney made for the years 1924 and 1925.

SOME progress was made at Philadelphia in the efforts of the union miners and operators to negotiate a new wage agreement.

After two days of discussion of conditions in the Pennsylvania soft coal fields and in the bituminous territory generally a sub scale committee of six members each was appointed to get down to work and attempt to arrive at a basis for negotiations.

It was made clear by both sides, however, that no concrete proposition had yet been advanced. The miners said the joint conference was called by the operators and any proposition must come from them.

Airmen Will Resume Fighting Forest Fires

The little band of former service aviators who annually patrol the great forest areas of the West to detect and aid in the fighting of fires will be on the job again this summer despite a shortage of planes.

The War department, which for the last eight years has been furnishing the forest service with machines for this purpose, has found a way to get around a shortage and aid a distressed neighboring branch of the government.

As a result planes will be operated again this summer from Glendale and Sacramento, Calif., Eugene, Ore., and Vancouver and Spokane, Wash., in an effort to cut down the $20,000,000 annual fire loss in the national and private forests.

Transporting fire fighting tools and supplies and dropping them where needed on the firing lines, scouting of fires after severe electrical storms and during periods when smoke and haze obscure the forest from ground lookout stations and reconnaissance to determine where best to concentrate fire fighting forces are the chief duties of the forest air patrol.

Eight planes were used last year to protect the main forest regions of California, Oregon, Washington, western Montana and northern Idaho. From June to September, the season of greatest fire hazard, a total of 483 flights were made for a flying time of 1,002 hours. The cost of the work amounted to $43,539.

WHEN HE REACHED THE TOP

(©, by D. J. Walsh.)

BESS CARTER and Tom Kelly sat on a bench in that secluded corner of the park where the large trees grew. It was a spring afternoon, gay, bright, fragrant. Bess wore a new suit and hat; Tom wore a new ulster. They had chanced to meet as Bess left her father's office and Tom left his employer's and had wandered into the park, where they could talk in private.

"I can get those rooms over Brent's store," Tom said, while his gray eyes dwelt wistfully upon Bess' pretty flushed face. "Have you ever seen them, dear? They're very nice rooms, freshly papered and painted. Of course, we would not have to stay there always, but just to begin with I'm sure they'd do very nicely. You know"—Tom's voice vibrated with emotion—"home's where the heart is. As far as that goes, I'd—be happy anywhere with you."

Bess bit her lip as she tore a grass blade into atoms. If she could only stop Tom talking like that! If she could only stop liking to listen when he talked like that! There was only one way, a brutal way perhaps, but instantaneous death is better than long-drawn-out suffering.

"Tom dear," she said, laying her hand on his shoulder. She paused abruptly, for he had taken her hand in his. Sighing, she drew her hand away. "Tom," she began, "you mustn't talk like this any more. It's all nonsense. I can't marry you, because there is something else I must do." She went on hastily, ignoring his exclamation: "Father's health is getting so poor that he can't attend to the office the way he should and I am going to take his place. I begin tomorrow: I am going to make a success of it. So you see marriage is out of the question—I'm sorry, Tom. Of course, I want to be your friend always—"

Tom covered his face with his hands. No use pleading when she used that tone. He knew too well for that. After a moment he lifted his head, gazing into the distance sadly.

"In that case," he said slowly, "there's nothing to keep me here any longer. I'm going to—Mexico."

Bess did not see him again.

The little business Horace Carter had tried to keep alive was dying under his hands when his daughter took command. Horace went to a sanitarium and Bess sat down at his desk with the calendar in front of her warning her that Saturday was a bad day to begin anything. But Bess had courage and determination, qualities in which her father had been lacking. These she had received from her mother, who certainly must have had both courage and determination in plenty or she would never have married Horace Carter in the first place.

Sitting there in her father's chair with the dingy calendar facing her, Bess realized that Tom Kelly had meant more to her than she had thought and was not likely to mean less as the years went by. But she could not marry him and let him assume the support of her father as well as herself, for it would come to that sooner or later. As it was she had taken hold of the business unhampered, and she intended not only to resuscitate it but to nourish it into vigorous health. A stupendous task indeed, one that would have staggered an ordinary girl. But Bess wasn't an ordinary girl. Besides, she was desperate.

During the three months Horace Carter remained in the sanitarium Bess earned barely enough to pay his expenses. After working hard all day she went home to the small rented house, cooked her supper and ate it all alone. When her father came home he was not much improved in health and until his death three years later Bess had almost a helpless invalid on her hands.

Those three years told the story of the girl's pluck and endurance. She managed to keep ahead of expenses, to win trade and to enlarge the business. She managed, too, to keep the home going and give her father some companionship and care. In spite of working hard she did not change much. She was a little thinner, possibly, with less color, but still fresh and bright and charming. In all those three years she never went to a party or enjoyed any social pleasure, for she had no time.

Horace Carter's death found Bess with a well-established business in good running order. But she had not yet reached the height of success to which she aspired. People who had smiled tolerantly at the inefficiency of the father should be made to gasp at the achievement of the daughter. Her father's name still on the old window should yet mean something in the town.

Slowly she won her way upward, fighting competition, building on her failures, winning trade by every honest method she could devise. The time came when the old office would no longer house her enterprises and she bought a building and moved into it. In one corner of this building she made her home, a suite of pretty rooms, and hired an old friend to keep house for her.

Yet, though she was now recognized as a successful business woman with steady growing influence, she was still womanly, sweet, modest, a slender young person with fair hair and wistful depths to her violet eyes. The one who know her best was Mrs. Peters, her housekeeper and her mother's old friend.

Of course, Bess had her chances to marry—one very great chance, indeed. Jackson McCall offered her a beautiful home, peace, love, protection. Never to have to sit in an office chair again! She realized that she was tired but still—why marry a man she did not love? And so she told her suitor with tears in her eyes. She did not, however, regret when Jackson married Helen Joneston, though Mrs. Peters sighed deeply.

"I'm afraid you'll never have such a chance again, dear," the old woman said.

At last Bess reached the top, or what was considered the top, in that small town. It was lonesome up there, she found. In the years that had passed she had left many she knew on the way. She was alone and she began to wonder if the result was worth the big struggle she had waged in order to attain it.

She decided to retire from business and settle down to a quiet street with Mrs. Peters to rest, read and refresh her soul. A far-reaching advertisement brought many offers for her business. One she accepted. The morning came when she was to meet the purchaser. She entered the attorney's office and found the man awaiting her. As she looked into his face she recognized Tom Kelly.

They shook hands, said the usual things. Then the papers were drawn and signed, the money paid and Bess went home to think it over.

The same Tom, fine, clear-eyed, grave. He, too, had succeeded in the years she had not heard from him. He had mentioned his family—well!

A few days later Bess passing by the old building saw a man lettering the window with a new name. A little boy was playing in the snow outside, Tom's boy! She stopped to speak to the child and Tom appeared.

"My family, Bess," he said smiling. "Dick is the son of the man who was my best friend. Dick's mother died when he was born and Richard gave me the child to bring up—which I shall do to the best of my ability."

Bess learned that Tom and Dick were living at Mrs. Price's boarding house. The boy fell in love with Bess and would not let her alone. He began to spend almost as much time with her as with his Uncle Tom. Gradually Tom was drawn into the little circle and many pleasant evenings were spent in Bess' pretty living room with Mrs. Peters looking on over her knitting.

Tom had reached the top and he, too, found it to be a lonely place. He had tried to satisfy his heart hunger by loving Dick.

It was really Dick who proposed to Bess. The boy was sitting between Bess and Tom on the davenport before the fire one stormy evening when he suddenly exclaimed:

"Uncle Tom, if you don't marry Aunt Bess I'm going to when I grow up."

A moment later Tom reached past Dick to press his first kiss on Bess' face.

Valuable Alloy

Duralumin is an alloy of aluminum, copper and magnesium. It contains approximately 92 per cent aluminum, 3.5 to 4.5 per cent of copper and ½ of 1 per cent of magnesium. It has a tensile strength of 55,000 pounds per square inch of surface. Duralumin girders weigh only one-third of a pound per linear foot, but where they are used for beams for testing purposes and exposed to loads evenly distributed they will carry a burden of 125 pounds per running foot.

Fortune's Smile Gave Napoleon His Chance

Among the strange stories that have been told concerning the method Napoleon Bonaparte used to raise the money that enabled him to take command of the army of Italy is that which endures in the whispering gallery of history, declaring that the gaming table was responsible and that one night's play was the pivot upon which the whole history of Europe was made to turn. After raising all the funds he could, Napoleon found the result far short of expenses for the journey. Confiding in a devoted clerk, he bade him take the money and either to lose the whole or increase it to a more substantial amount before morning. The clerk was, as Napoleon well knew, a practiced gamester, and in this crisis fortune favored him. In the middle of the night he returned and reported good luck, but the Man of Destiny was dissatisfied, and sent him back, saying that he must double the godsend or lose all. Again at the tables fortune was propitious, a long succession of throws won, and the clerk returned laden with more than sufficient to enable his general to take command in splendor and eclat. Napoleon made the clerk, Andoche Junot, aide-de-camp and later a general.—Detroit News.

Famous Sacred River

Jordan is the name of the well known sacred river of Palestine. It rises in the north among the foothills of the Lebanon mountains, and flowing southward in a very sinuous course, passes through the sea of Galilee or Tiberias, reaches the Dead sea, which is 1,316 feet below the level of the Mediterranean sea. The length of the River Jordan is 120 miles.

Hard and Soft Metals

Iridium, a metal belonging to the platinum group and often used on the tips of fountain pens, is the hardest pure metal known, recent tests have shown, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Molybdenum is next and tungsten third. Of the common metals, nickel is the hardest, ranking fifth. The tests did not include alloys, such as those of steel with a high percentage of carbon, which ranks higher than any. The tests showed that thallium is the softest metal, being twenty-fourth on the scale, lead was twenty-third and tin twenty-second. Gold ranks as number eighteen, silver fifteen, copper eleven, and iron ten.

Like Ghost From Past

In a letter recently received from her daughter Mary, Mrs. Randolph Winslow of Baltimore, Md., learned Mary was greatly enjoying her vacation, that she was a good girl and would be home soon. Mrs. Winslow appreciated getting the letter, although it had been written 30 years ago and Mary now has two children of her own. After a service of 40 years on the front porch, the Winslow family mail box gave up the ghost and this letter when the bottom fell out.

The Government Is Satisfied

Over a year ago when congress was about to appropriate nearly two million dollars for buildings at the base hospital in Menlo Park, a representative was sent here to report on the climatic conditions, topography and all conditions in general that would be suitable for the war veterans and for justification of the vast expenditure of money. The government wanted to be satisfied that the fund would be spent in a desirable place that would bring comfort to the boys who fought to save the flag. It was solicitious as to their walfare. A thorough investigation was made. The report is now on file in the archives at Washington. It pays a glowing tribute to the climate of Menlo Park, saying it had the most equitable climate in all the world. Statistics were compared both at Washington and Sacramento and this was the result of the research work.

After the report had been filed the appropriation immediately followed. On the strength of this report the government, it is said, completes making the institution here a general hospital and one of the largest in the country, where 2000 men are to be employed.

K. of C. Work Discontinued

The Knights of Columbus recreation department at the base hospital in charge of Mr. Ward will be discontinued shortly, much to the regret of the veterans located there. The service started during the war has been beneficial to the disabled soldiers located in the various hospitals throughout the country. Mr. Ward is beloved at the hospital for his kindness to the inmates. He attends to their little wants, provides entertainment and sees that their every whim is gratified. This is in addition to the great care bestowed by a grateful government.

Many Respond to Commissioners

The fire commissioners have sent out to all property owners in the district a copy of an ordinance adopted some time ago making it compulsory to clean-up all rubbish and burn the grass on vacant lots. Many owners live in distant parts of the country and one land magnate resides in far away Ireland. All have responded cheerfully, many ordering the work done while others have authorized the commissioners to do the required work at the expense of the owner. One woman, at Oakland, owning a parcel of land at North Fair Oaks asks in reponse to the communication where Menlo Park is located. Notwithstanding the fact that the building of the Dumbarton bridge has made Oakland and Menlo Park neighbors she still remains ignorant of the location of one of the best advertised villages in the state.

MENLO C. OF C. ADDRESSES LETTER TO SUPERVISORS

The following letter was read from the Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce at the meeting of the board of supervisors last Monday:

Honorable Board of Supervisors
County of San Mateo,
Redwood City, California.
Gentlemen:

The logical outlet for the increasing travel over the Willow road recently completed from the Bay road to the Dumbarton Bridge approach is over the extension of the Willow Road which is in bad condition, narrow and full of sharp turns, trees and telephone poles, dangerous to autoists.

The thoroughfare must be straightened out and improved if this travel over the Dumbarton bridge is to be properly taken care of. The abutting property owners are anxious and willing to donate sufficient lands for the widening of this road.

The late and lamented John MacBain had the matter fully in hand, but was summoned to report to the Great Supervisor above before he had carried out his plans. We know his successor, the popular and efficient supervisor, John Poole, will take up this matter as soon as it is called to his attention.

We urge that the County Engineer be advised or authorized to make his surveys and find out just how much land is needed to make the Willow road passable and fit for heavy travel now crowding this narrow road.

New bus lines are now applying to the State Railroad Commission for permits to run busses on Willow road to Middlefield road. It is proposed to route the Los Angeles busses on the other side of the bay over the Dumbarton bridge and through the Peninsula to San Francisco, thus avoiding the crossing the ferries at Oakland. The present condition of Willow road will not permit the big busses to travel over it in safety. It is imperative that this thoroughfare be repaired and widened at once.

We urge your attention in this matter and hope for action in a short time.

Very respectfully,
MENLO PARK CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

FAIR PRICES EVERY DAY AND NO LIMIT

WHEN a merchant quotes a fair price on an article he hopes to sell all he has at the price named. When he names a wrong price he admits it by placing a limit on the quantity sold hoping that the bait thus held out to the unwary buyer may result in the sale of some other article on which the price is not so well known. Once you know that the pricing system of a store is not based on sound merchandising principles how can you be sure that all the wrong prices are in your favor? Moral: Look out for the store with a quantity limit tied to the price. It is not honest merchandising.

We have built our business on a basis of fair prices every day of the week and have all you want at the price.

Now about this buying power stuff: We belong to UNITED GROCERS, a buying organization of nearly 300 retail grocers with a purchasing power greater than any store or combination of stores in California and own our goods just as cheap as any of them.

VOLUME LXVIII., NUMBER 11. REDWOOD CITY, SAN MATEO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA, JUNE 10, 1927. ESTABLISHED 1859.

Charles N. Felton Redwood Grove To Be Dedicated

On Sunday, June 12th, the Charles N. Felton Grove of giant redwoods in Humaboldt county, California, will be dedicated as a unit of the California State Park system. Through the Save-the-Redwoods League, Mrs. Kate Felton Nelson of San Francisco, daughter of the late United States senator, has purchased approximately 100 acres of the finest virgin Redwood forest—235 miles north of San Francisco on the Redwood Highway, and has deeded it to the State, to stand for all time as a memorial to one of California's pioneers. Joseph Knowland, chairman of the Executive committee of the Save-the-Redwoods League, will be in charge of the ceremonies. Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of Stanford University, will make the address, and a memorial statue by Haig Patigian, California sculptor, will be unveiled. Because of the popularity of the Redwood Highway and the interest taken in the State Parks movement, a large attendance at the dedication is expected.

Senator Charles N. Felton, to whom the grove is dedicated, was one of California's prominent pioneers. Born in New York, he went West at 17 during the gold rush. He began his career in the mining camps, set up as storekeeper in San Francisco, studied law and was admitted to the Bar. Throughout his life was closely interested in the development of the resources of California. Besides several local political positions, he served two terms in the California legislature and two terms in congress. He was United States Sub-Treasurer in San Francisco and was elected to the United States Senate to complete the term of Senator George Hearst, who had died in office. Under Governor Pardee, he served on the State Prison Board. He died at the age of 86.

The dedication of the Charles N. Felton Grove will add another grove to the score of memorials that have been deeded to the State through the Save-the-Redwoods League. Since its organization in 1919, 3,000 acres of primeval Redwood forest, valued at close to a million dollars, have been secured through appropriation or private gift. The custom of dedicating groves of trees, rather than monuments, to the memory of heroes and friends, living and dead, has had a great impetus in recent years.

Among the groves in the Redwood region are those named after Hon. Stephen T. Mather, director of National Parks; Henry S. Graves, Provost of Yale University; Hon. William Kent, ex-Congressman. ex-Governer Wm D. Stephens, and ex-Governor Friend W. Richardson. There are groves also dedicated to the memory of the late Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, under Woodrow Wilson, and to Colonel Raynal C. Bolling, first American officer of high rank to die in the World War.

The grove of Charles N. Felton which will be dedicated on June 12th lies just across the South Fork of the Eeel river from Bolling Grove. Those attending the dedication will also be able to see the Humboldt State Redwood Park, almost 3000 acres, already preserved through the efforts of the league. Since the formation of the Save-the-Redwoods League, over 6,000 persons from every walk of life and from every section of the country, have joined the their efforts in a campaign which is succeeding. A comprehensive plan of intelligent conservation of the finest growth of redwoods, coupled with scientific reforestation of areas which must be cut over, has opened the region to tourists who have spread the story of the beauty and have taken up the cause of preservation. And in November, 1928, the voters of the State of California will have the opportunity to vote on a $6,000,000 state park bond issue, to be matched with $6,000,000 more from private gifts to preserve as parks the outstanding spots of California—among them the finest Redwood groves.

WORK TO BE STARTED ON BROADWAY EXTENSION

With the passage of a resolution of intention by the board of trustees of Redwood City for the extension of Broadway across Main street, that important improvement was brought one step nearer realization. The resolution, prepared by City Attorney Albert Mansfield, was introduced and passed without dissent.

City Treasurer B. E. Myers stated that sufficient funds were now in the treasury to proceed with the work.

Redwood Granted Shipping Rates on Horses from Here

Redwood City on April last was granted car load rates on shipments of horses from this point and this rate was approved by the State Railroad Commission. This makes Redwood City an important point for the shipment of horses to eastern points. San Francisco, San Bruno and San Jose are the only towns in this section enjoying this rate.

On account of this rate all shipments of horses on the peninsula are made from Redwood City. On Monday the American Express Company shipped a car load of horses from here to Chicago for Mrs. W. P. Roth of Woodside. The animals were sent to the South Shore Country Club South Chicago, to take part in the big horse show there. Last fall other big shipments were made by Mrs. Roth, who has the finest stables in the west. Only recently William Tevis of San Mateo shipped from this point a car load of ponies to Chicago, saving a big sum by taking advantage of the rates here.

Seventeen car loads of horses were shipped from here last year. Among the shippers were Mrs. Roth, Mr. Tevis, Mrs. Perry of Atherton, the Hellmans of Menlo Park, Jacklings of Woodside and Mrs. Wood of Portola. Car load rates are $842 per car and without this rate a car is listed at $1200. This big saving will be taken advantage of by all farmers and shippers of animals east and north. The low rate will cause Redwood City to become a big shipping point.

San Bruno is given the low rate on account of the Tanforan race track there which during the racing season brings a vast number of horses there from all points.

Redwood City also has become a great shipping point for flowers. Last year 142 car loads of chrysanthemums were sent east from Redwood City, Oakland and San Francisco, the greater portion of the flowers were grown at Redwood City and Menlo Park.

Last spring a new industry in shipping was inaugurated in Redwood City when several cars of acasia blooms were sent east where they found ready sale. The experiment proved an unqualified success. This industry promises to become a profitable one for the growers of this section.

Gradually the products of the peninsula are becoming known in the east and it would not be surprising that a big portion of everything grown here would be sent beyond the Rockies.

Redwood City has a great future as a shipping point. Let the shipping industry be encouraged.

Woodside Parent Teachers Discuss Plans For Raising Funds For Volley-ball Court

Various plans for the raising of funds to provide a combined basket and volley-ball court for the play ground, as well as several necessary items for the school before fall opening were under discussion at the last meeting of the Woodside Parent-Teacher Association. Plans for a fall bazhar are also well under way, with Mrs. Neuman, Mrs. Dudley and Mrs. McKenzie on the committee in charge of the articles to be made by the various members.

Mrs. J. J. Garland, first vice-president of the San Mateo Co. Federation, was present, and installed the following officers for the coming year; president, Mrs. G .W. Givens; vice-president, Mrs. Paul Palmer; corresponding secretary, Mrs. O. Dudley; recording secretary, Mrs. P. Jarvis; treasurer, Mrs. Albert Meyer; auditor, Mrs. James Neuman; historian, Mrs. A. J. Jarvis; parliamentarian, Mrs. L. P. Davis.

Mrs. J. E. Baughn of Redwood City was a visitor and gave some interesting comments on the recent national convention.

There will be a social evening of games, music, refreshments and stunts at the school next Friday. Admission will be 35c and a large number of the young people are expected. Mrs. Albert Meyer is chairman of the program with Mrs. L. P. Davis in charge of refreshments.

A movie show will be held in the big hall on the evening of June 14th at which time movies taken of the local May fete parade will be shown in addition to the regular feature picture.

SKAGGS SAFEWAY STORES
Distribution Without Waste

Thousand "Store-Power"

Like the man who operates an engine of enormous "horse-power," the Safeway Man—through the thousand "store-power" at his command—is equipped to far out-distance all others in the race to satisfactorily sarve the food-buying public. Never before, in the history of Western merchandising, have such facilities for handling the necessities of life without waste been available to men trained in their efficient operation. Such facilites n the hands of an organization of men whose inflexible purpose it is to reduce waste in distribution to the minimum have enabled us to wipe out many useless profits and overheads which the ordinary dealer must pay and add to the price he charges the consumer. Through this unparallelled "store-poewr" the "spread" between producer and consumer is materially reduced—to your very great profit.
